The Bare Knuckle Boxing Hall of Fame (BKBFHOF), located in Belfast, NY, is the only Hall of Fame dedicated to remembering and honoring both current and pioneer bare knuckle boxers and their supporters. The BKBFHOF is housed in the original 1889 barns where the great John L. Sullivan trained to prepare for the epic 75-round Bare Knuckle Boxing World Championship bout against Jake Kilrain!

These barns were owned by Sullivan's trainer who was not only the world's first fitness guru but also the World Greco-Roman Heavyweight Wrestling Champion of his time, William Muldoon. Muldoon is known as the "Father of the Modern Medicine Ball." He was also an innovator of other exercise tools used by today's athletes. Today, Muldoon's fitness regimens of yesteryear are still quite popular and considered "old school" -- meaning his fighters also trained by chopping up piles of wood, jogging local trails, blacksmithing and working heavy ropes. These barns were locked for 120 years until the BKBFHOF owner and president, Mr. Scott Burt, restored them and began sharing them with the public in 2009.

Eagle statues are the icons of Ashland University and well-established pieces of campus culture. The tradition began in 1941 when, as a prank, students stole a 400-pound advertising emblem from a local Case Implement dealership in Wooster. Perching on a cement globe in front of the Recreation Center, "Old Abe" is the largest of the flock. He was a gift from Case, with the assumption that after he came to campus, Ashland students would stop stealing eagles from the dealerships. In the five years after Ashland received Old Abe, four new eagles had been stolen; since 1941 approximately 30 eagles have made their way to the campus.

There has been a mill on Lanterman's Falls since 1799. The current structure on Mill Creek near Youngstown, OH, was built in 1845 and used solely as a gristmill. After falling into disrepair, it was purchased and repurposed by Mill Creek MetroParks in 1892 and held a ballroom, concession stand and bathhouse for swimmers. In 1933 it was converted to a nature museum; it became a historical museum in 1972. Lanterman's Mill was entered into the National Register of Historic Places in 1976. This community treasure was fully restored 1982-85.

Located in southwest Pennsylvania's Laurel Highlands and built in 1935, Fallingwater is Frank Lloyd Wright's crowning achievement in organic architecture and widely considered the all-time best work of American architecture. Its owners, Edgar and Liliane Kaufmann, were a prominent Pittsburgh couple, known for their distinctive sense of style and good taste. In 1963 the Kaufmanns donated the property to the Western Pennsylvania Conservancy, together with 1,543 acres of surrounding land. It opened its door as a museum in 1964 and has since hosted more than five million visitors.

The Guthrie Theatre was built in 1926 as a space for vaudeville performances. As the popularity of silent pictures grew, the "Queen of Broad Street" responded by installing a large square white plaster screen on the back of the stage and started to run silent films between shows. From there, it grew into a full-time movie house, opening on August 1, 1927. Over the decades, the Guthrie has changed hands several times, but has never lost its historic art deco charm, nor its commitment to entertaining her neighbors.

The Guthrie Theatre is located in the heart of Grove City, PA.

The Lincoln County courthouse is located in the county seat of Hamlin, W.V. The county was formed in 1867 and named in honor of President Abraham Lincoln. The original courthouse was built in 1875 but in 1909 a fire destroyed the building and all records, except for some land and tax records dating from 1867, which were not in the building at the time. A new courthouse was built in 1911; the current courthouse was built in 1964. A severe, formal symmetry characterizes this yellow brick, limestone-trimmed building standing on a low granite base. The building is a typical expression of 1960s modernism.

Edwin L. Drake traveled to Titusville, Pennsylvania in 1857 as an agent of the Seneca Oil Company of Connecticut. His mission was to find and produce crude oil in quantities that would make it commercially successful for refining into kerosene. In 1859, the Drake Well struck oil at 69½ feet, giving birth to an industry that has forever shaped our modern world. The museum is a full-size replica of Drake's engine house and derrick. Built in 1945, this structure encloses the famous well and features working reproductions of the wood-fired boiler and steam engine that Drake used to drill and pump oil from the well.

The Frank Gatski Memorial Bridge is a 900-foot cable-stayed bridge crossing the Ohio River at Huntington, WV and Proctorville, OH. Bridge planning started in the early 1970s. Construction began in 1983 and was completed in 1985. It was the first bridge of its type in West Virginia, utilizing concrete instead of steel for its construction. The bridge was renamed during halftime of the Marshall-UTEP Football game on November 18, 2006, for Marshall University's first member of the Pro Football Hall of Fame, Frank "Gunner" Gatski.
